TO THE COLLECTION OF CASTS OF STATUES, BUSTS, AND BAS RELIEFS IN THE MUSEUM OF ART.

What tho' no marble breathes, no canvas glows,
From ev'ry point a ray of genius flows !
Be mine to bless the more mechanic skill
That stamps, renews, and multiplies at will ;
And cheaply circulates thro' distant climes
The fairest relics of the purest times.
Here from the mould to conscious being start
Those living forms, the miracles of Art :
Here chosen gems imprest on sulphur shine,
That slept for ages in a second mine.

ROGERS.

THE religious thought and feeling of the inhabitants of Greece exercised a powerful effect on Sculpture. Greece may be considered the country in which the art achieved its highest perfection.

The rude block of stone, the distorted trunk of a tree, the composite monsters polluted by pagan rites, claimed no reverence from a people endowed with a fancy so rich, an imagination so fertile.

To adore the elements or the vivifying powers of nature in their abstract vagueness, however suited to those content with the illusory contemplation of what they were unable to define, did not satisfy the sensibility of a nation gifted with a genius so active.

In the development of the exponents of their belief the Greeks lent to tradition a graceful and engaging credibility.

By interweaving the fictions handed down to them from their ancestors their mythological system became extremely complicated. Heroes and Heroines, associated with different alleged manifestations of the Gods, renowned for acts of valor, for having introduced civilising arts, wise laws, or useful inventions, were raised above the rank of mere mortals to celestial honors.

At an early period the Greeks gave form to the great divinities to which they ascribed the government of the universe, also to the subordinate powers believed to superintend and direct the particular affairs of mankind.

These forms were at first invested with attributes, physical and intellectual, superior to those conferred on man; next with a majesty and dignity emblematical of the Divine nature; lastly, in them was embodied the perfection of human symmetry, to which was imparted an ideal grace and beauty.

Exhibited in temples, halls, and public places, or enshrined in private sanctuaries, they warmed the beholder to a sense of devotion more intelligible than could have been aroused by the mysterious relics of a barbarous antiquity.

Inspired by her handmaidens, Poetry and Painting, and chastened by the enlightened criticism of successive generations, who by familiarity from infancy with such sublime works had been schooled to a correct judgment, Sculpture eventually, as it were, breathed life into the marble figure, and touched into motion the complex group.

The history of Greek Sculpture may be divided into three periods :—

The Dædalian.

That of Pericles ; or, the Heroic.

That of Alexander the Great.

THE FIRST ranged over several centuries, from B.C. 1200 to B.C. 550. Deities and Heroes were the subjects which chiefly engaged the attention of the Sculptor.

Materials used were clay, wood,* stone, marble, metals of various kinds. Opening the eyes, separating the feet, liberating the arms, and extending the limbs marked the works of this age as different from those of the primitive Egyptian stiff and formal style, according to which the eyes were closed, the feet placed together, and the arms held by the sides, indicating a representation of the dead rather than of the living person.

The names of some Statuaries distinguished in this era have been preserved. For what is known respecting them and the others alluded to, the reader is referred to the numerous writings upon Art, ancient and modern, collected in the Library.

Amongst the Sculptors are Dædalus, the Athenian; Smilis, of Crete; Engrammus, who, with Euehir and Diopus, followed the fortunes of Damaratus (father of Tarquin, eventually King of Rome) in his flight from Corinth to Etruria, B.C. 664, and gave a new direction to Etruscan art. Theodorus, son of Rhæus, and brother of Telecles, to whom credit is given for the invention, B.C. 600, of casting in moulds, although as it had been practised long before by the Phœnicians, B.C. 1005,† all justly due to him may be the honor of having introduced the practice into Greece. Malas, his son Micciades, his grandson Anthernus, with Bupalus and Athenis, his sons, sustained for nearly a century the reputation of the Isle of Chios.

† 1 Kings vii. 45.

Dipœnus and Scyllis, Cretans, who, according to Pliny, were the first to distinguish themselves as Sculptors in marble, left their native island and were established, about B.C. 590, at Sicyon, a town near Corinth, for ages the resort of Artists. Endœus, of Athens, was their pupil.

Glaucus, about B.C. 570, made the important discovery of the mode of soldering metals, at which time Theodorus, grandson of him above named, obtained renown as a statuary in bronze.

Perillus, about B.C. 565, fabricated for Phalaris, of Agrigentum, a Brazen Bull, the well-known instrument of torture used by that tyrant, of which the inventor was the first victim. Tectæus and Angelion flourished about B.C. 548. Doryclidas and Medon, his brother, were of Sparta. The works of these Artists were distributed through Greece and its islands, and found their way to the colonies on the continent of Asia, and eventually to Italy.

Pliny states that Augustus placed in the Temple of the Palatine Apollo, at Rome, some statues by Bupalus and Athenis, adding that they wrought in Parian marble called lychnites, because quarried by the light of λύχρον, a link or torch.

It is not probable that many productions of this school are now in existence, at least in a perfect state.

No representatives of the period are in this collection.

THE SECOND combined with the grosser figures invented in the time of fable, as well as with the loveliness of female grace, the stateliness of heroic proportion developed into sublimity in gods and demigods. It extended from B.C. 550 to B.C. 390, and rose to the highest eminence after the memorable repulse of the Persian, Xerxes, B.C. 480. Pericles, being established in power at Athens, about B.C. 460, undertook to reconstruct the temples destroyed by the invader, and to embellish the capital of his contemplated confederation of the States of Greece,—a bond to unite which would have been the religion professed by all.

With the illustrious Phidias (pupil of Ageladas) as his director of works, he built the Parthenon, the temple of the virgin goddess Athene—Minerva of the Romans—of which the architects were Callicrates and Ictinus; the Propylæa, of which Mnesicles was the architect; the Odeum, a theatre for musical performances, and the Temple of Eleusis, on which Coroebus, Metagenes, and Xenocles were employed.

These buildings were adorned by Alcamenes and Agoræritus, instructed by Phidias, and others of the same school. To the statuaries already named may be added Polyclitus, Calamis, and Myron; Crysothemis and Eulitidas, of Argos; Amphicrates, Agasias or Hegesias, Menæchmus, and Sôidas, of Naupactus.

Gold, ivory, silver, many varieties of bronze and mixed metals, and the finest kinds of marble were employed. Statues made of the first two when used in combination were called chrys-elephantine; when various marbles were used for the purpose of producing variety of color, either to represent the hair, drapery, or ornaments, they were called poly lithic; when that effect was accomplished by painting they were called polychromic. Eyes made of silver, crystal, glass, and paste were not unfrequently inserted, and this singular practice, so strangely at variance with our notions of pure taste, prevailed during the meridian splendor of the art. Wax, plaster, pitch, amber, aromatics, and costly perishable and combustible substances were also employed, according to the caprice of the artist or the extravagance or ostentation of the person for whom he wrought. The working of metals with sharp instruments, beating out, and embossing them with punches after they had been partially cast, was styled the Toreutic art.

The impetus given to Art by these extensive operations was much stimulated by the refinement thus produced, and materially influenced by the scientific study of Homer, whose poems had been collected by Pisistratus. The frequent representations of the tragedies of Æschylus, Sophocles, and Euripides, who flourished at this time, gave also to the community an elevation of sentiment reflected in the severe and simple grandeur of design, the majesty of conception, the force, power, and delicacy of execution, which form the characteristics of the first division of this period.

Amongst the cotemporaries and immediate successors of the above-named Artists, were Ctesilaus, Naucydes, of Argos, Pythagoras, of Rhegium, in Italy, successful in a contest with Myron; Calamis, Phradmon, and Callimachus, inventor of the Corinthian column; Theoco-mus, Dinomenes, Lycius, Canachus, and Patrocles, who, with others of greater or lesser fame, followed in the course of time.

Statues in the Museum, said to be of the Heroic period, are—No. 3, the Amazon; Nos. 26 27, the Discoboli; Nos. 36 37, the Gladiators. Respecting Nos. 32, the Fates, 41, the Horse's Head, 42, Ilissus, 61, Theseus, and the rest of the Elgin marbles, there is no doubt.

THE THIRD period may be extended so as to include from B.C. 390 to B.C. 146.

Moved by the success of the celebrated painters, Pamphilus, Zeuxis, Parrhasius, and Apelles, impressed by the subtle disquisitions of the Philosophers, and acted on directly by the increase of national wealth and luxury, Sculptors now bestowed more attention on the graceful flow of outline, on the skilful arrangement of the hair, on the becoming disposition of drapery. The ideal of human beauty was now produced in its perfection.

To the study of boldness and grandeur, to the heroic spirit and religious earnestness of the preceding age, succeeded the imitation of Nature, heightened by the charms of animated expression, enriched by the excellence and highly-wrought finish of execution.

The great works of the early part of this period were the Temple of Minerva, at Tegea, in Arcadia, the largest and most magnificent in the Peloponnesus, and the Mausoleum. The former was built under the direction of Scopas, of Paros, whose Veins—removed subsequently to the Temple of Mars, in Rome dedicated by Brutus Callaicus,—was pronounced by Pliny to have surpassed in excellence even that of Praxiteles. The latter, a Sepulchre, reared B.C. 352, at Halicarnassus (the modern Budrum), by Artemisia, Queen of Caria, in honor of her husband, was decorated by the same Scopas, and by Bryaxis, Timotheus, and Leochares, Athenians, each of whom, as it is supposed, undertook the execution of the bas-reliefs on one side of the frieze of the peristyle, some of which were added, in 1846, to the vast collection in the British Museum.

Next in order of time and repute came Lysippus,* respecting whom Alexander the Great published an edict that no other person should represent him in bronze, as he had also directed in favor of Apelles, the painter, with regard to his portrait, and of Pyrgoteles,† the lapidary, with respect to engraving his figure on gems. The school of Lysippus, at Sicyon, was continued under Euthyrates, Daippos and Bedas, his sons; Lysistratus, his brother; Chares, Phoenix, Eutychides, Phanis, and Tisierates, his pupils; while at Athens flourished Praxiteles, with his sons, Cephisodotus and Timarehus; Euphranor, skilled also as a painter, and memorable as a writer upon Art; and Apollodorus, father of Cleomenes, to whom the Venus de Medici was for some time attributed.

They were followed by Pyromachus, to whom commentators on Pliny give the credit of being the author, in bronze, of the figure known as the Dying Gladiator; and Silanion, whose statue of Sappho, styled by Cicero “so perfect, so elegant, so elaborate,” is enumerated amongst the spoils of Verres.

The intestine troubles which continued to distract Greece, after the death of Alexander, drove many distinguished artists forth to seek protection and encouragement from the Ptolemies of Egypt, the Seleucidae of Asia, and the kings and people of Sicily. When Carthage fell beneath the arms of Scipio, and Corinth was destroyed by Mummius, the Art treasures of both cities were transferred to Rome, which began to absorb the wealth and attract the talent of other countries.

With these important events this period may be said to have closed.

Statues in the Museum assigned to this era are Nos. 6 and 7, Apollos; No. 12, The Boxers; No. 14, The Boy and Goose; Nos. 33 and 34, Fauns; and Nos. 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, Venuses.

The history of Sculpture under the Romans may, for convenience, be made to embrace from B.C. 146 to A.D. 180.

Hor. Ep. ii. l. 239.

† Pliny vii. 37; xxxvii. 1-4.

Architecture, the construction of roads to enable them to extend and retain their conquests, aqueducts, theatres, and vast arenas for the exhibition of their cruel sports, instituted to amuse and finally employed to enthral the people, engrossed this warlike race. They may be regarded as admirers of art, rather than as a nation producing artists from amongst themselves. Unlike the Greeks, who forbade the practice of Sculpture by any but persons of gentle birth, and who annexed to the study of its rules a protracted and expensive training, the Romans considered the arts of war and government* their chief pursuit; they esteemed most highly the military distinctions which led to the principal civil preferments, and they willingly surrendered to others the supremacy in those accomplishments which required more finely-organized perceptions, more discriminating habit of thought, more cultivated and polished manners than they themselves could boast. Thus it was that they delegated the practice of most of the fine arts, as well as of the allied employments, to captives brought from abroad to swell the pomp of successive triumphs, or to slaves expressly educated for the purpose.

Genius, repressed in this servile condition, refused to display itself in such vigor as when, in the full enjoyment of liberty, it had been courted and honoured by the great; accordingly, it has been observed that the Romans seem to have contented themselves at first with copies of those remarkable statues which had not been transported to the capital. These were not in all instances rendered with strict fidelity to the originals, and a trifling deviation from the model was accepted as a compensation for the absence of the inventive faculty.

As taste ripened a more generous spirit grew up, and the enfranchisement of the Artist led to the emancipation of the intellect, and a consequent improvement in the style of Art.

Still the creative power, the embodiment of the workings of fancy and of the imagination, are not to be expected at the hands of a people eminently practical in their social, political, and religious institutions. Portraiture exact in minute detail, imitation unenlivened by any departure from the actual and the real, mark this period.

The magnificence of the buildings erected in the age of the early Cæsars, of the Flavian family, of Hadrian, and the Antonines, and the unprecedented splendor of the public shows, gave ample occupation to Artists; but the spirit thus awakened soon degenerated in consequence of the growing effeminacy of manners, and Artists were degraded into ministers of the pride, caprice, and wanton luxury of profligate Emperors.

There is considerable difficulty in fixing with precision the works expressly due to this period.

To inscribe on the plinth of the statue of an illustrious foreigner of a former age the name of a Roman warrior or statesman was, according to Cicero, a reprehensible act of frequent occurrence; and Suetonius informs us of a still more violent appropriation by Caligula, who collected antique statues of gods, famous for their beauty and the veneration paid to them, removed the heads and replaced them with his own. He carried his destructiveness still further, as he demolished or dispersed the statues of many distinguished personages set up in the public places in Rome; while Nero exceeded him in barbarism, for in his progress through Greece he overturned the statues which had been erected in honor of victors at the different national games.

The best known sculptors of this epoch are Posidonius and Coponius, who embellished the theatre of Pompey; Pasiteles, master of Stephanus, and Menelaus, his pupil; Arcesilaus, who produced the Venus Genetrix, placed in his Forum by Julius Caesar; Thaletion, a freedman of Mæcenæ; Chimarus, who made the shrine and statue of Germanicus; Zenodorus, who executed the colossal figure of the Sun, 120 feet high, intended to represent Nero, which was put in front of his golden house; Agesander, Athenodorus and Polydorus, authors of the Laocoon, of which many reproductions were known to exist.

Apollodorus, of Athens, superintended the erection of Trajan's column, enriched with bas-reliefs, showing powerful forms in natural and appropriate attitudes. Zeno, of Caria, Papias and Aristæus, of Cyprus, flourished under that emperor, who revived the art, then hastening to its decline.

The names of many of these persons sufficiently denote the foreign extraction of those who bore them.

Statues in the Museum ascribed to this period are No. 5, Antinous; 16, Canephora; 17, Castor and Pollux; 19, Cupid and Psyche; 31, Flora; 35, Germanicus; 46, Laocoon; 55, Pudicitia.

The period of primitive Christian Sculpture may be briefly passed by, inasmuch as unfortunately the Museum does not yet possess any of its curious and suggestive productions.

Drawing his inspiration from the pure sources of Holy Writ, absorbed by a devout enthusiasm, the chief aim of the early Christian Sculptor was a pious illustration of his subject, rather than a display of technical dexterity or an adherence to the rules of Art.

The oppression to which he was exposed by reason of his creed restricted the exercise of his abilities in a great measure to sepulchral and monumental works usually executed in relief.

Still a rare gleam of intellect occasionally shines through some of these simple and truthful labours, and although instances occur in which the mythology of ancient times is strangely intermixed with the new religion, the innocence, sincerity, and tenderness of motive of the designer may well disarm criticism on the homely nature of the execution.

Upon the change of the seat of government from Rome to Constantinople, the Emperor Constantine was soon impressed with the irresistible conviction that the principal impediment to making the city of his choice surpass all others in magnificence was the decline of Art.

Unable to resuscitate the expired genius of a former time, he imitated the rapacity of his predecessors; in order to heighten the splendor of his new "Colonia," the noblest and most favored daughter of old Rome, he denuded all other parts of the empire of their fairest ornaments.

Trophies of memorable wars, the statues of gods and heroes, of sages and poets, were transported to Byzantium, so that "nothing seemed wanting except their souls to animate the astonishing resemblances of these illustrious beings."* Of these statues not fewer than 427 were assembled in the temple dedicated to St. Sophia,† the Divine Wisdom.

The oriental character being unsuited to the severe study of Sculpture, Art took in the East a new direction; while Italy, reduced to the humiliating position of a power of secondary dignity, became a prey to successive wild invaders, whose only regard for works of Art was a superstitious dread of injuring such as their ignorance invested with a power of enchantment or sorcery.‡

For more than 600 years—from the time of Hannibal—no foreign enemy had insulted the walls of Rome. Alaric was the first who in her hour of weakness dared to aspire to the conquest of the eternal city.

He led his Visigoths from his conquests in Macedonia and Illyria, besieged thrice, and finally, A.D. 410, took and sacked the city, 1163 years after its foundation.

Genseric, A.D. 455, crossed with his Vandals from Africa, and plundered Rome of what had been left after or accumulated since the former pillage; and an avenging Nemesis gave to Carthage, at the hands of a barbarian, born on the shores of the Baltic, the spoils of her ancient and remorseless foe. In his heroic resistance to the furious assaults of Vitiges, A.D. 537, pent within the sepulchre of Hadrian, which, in his extremity, he converted into a fortress, Belisarius hurled upon the heads of the besiegers the statues with which that remarkable structure had been decorated; and the defenders of the capital thus reluctantly became the destroyers of its choicest and most esteemed ornaments.

Under such rude shocks as these the arts succumbed. They suffered still more, however, from the utter exhaustion of the human mind in the regions where they had formerly flourished, from the obliteration of all refined sentiment and the destruction of the whole spiritual and ideal world of antiquity to which they had been so much beholden.

Then closed on them the obscurity of that long and dreary interval of many hundred years, during which the Sculptor rarely showed his skill, except when associated with the Architect.

The Sculptor's hand produced on such occasions the accessory embellishments for those vast and elegant structures which remain monuments of the architectural ability and the exquisite taste of Ecclesiastics, the only depositaries of learning in a rude and uncouth age.

About the fifteenth century a fresh life was infused into the arts.

The recovery of manuscripts of many of the classical authors; the circulation and study of these, facilitated by the invention of Printing; the exhumation of some of the noble statues, buried for centuries beneath ruins; the improved condition of society in the principal states of Europe; the increase of wealth and the enlightened patronage of men of letters and of Artists, contributed to a development of the human intellect in literature, science, and the fine arts, as rapid as it was remarkable and brilliant.

An enumeration of the great masters, preceding and of the time of the Medici family, is needless. Their world-renowned names are imperishable: they live in their works. These combine the vigor of the pagan era and the spirituality of the new belief which displaced the old merely human ideal.

Statues and Reliefs which belong to this period are No. 20, Cupid; No. 45, Julian de Medici; and Holy Family, relief, by Michael Angelo Buonarotti; No. 48, Mercury, by John of Bologna; Boys, in relief, by Fiamingo and Donatelli; with Panels of the Gates of the Baptistry at Florence, by Ghiberti.

From that period to the present the transition has been gradual. Temporary fluctuations have occurred, according as the eminence or success of some particular master has captivated the public and directed the course of his admirers or imitators.

Comment upon the work of the contemporary Sculptor it is not proposed to submit. A decision upon it involves not only an acquaintance with the history of his art in its former phases, but of that of Architecture, with which it has so often acted in unison, and that of Painting, to which it is so closely allied.

It demands that a just allowance should be made for the embarrassments which impede attempts to render in the spirit of the antique, yet without slavish copying, subjects taken from the remote history of people, whose manners, customs, habits, were so different from ours; or those drawn from an extinct mythology, the mysterious origin of which is in so many of its recesses unknown, forgotten, or mis-understood. It requires, also, that consideration should be shown on account of the obstacles which enumber efforts to impersonate Christian virtues or abstract ideas, the rendering of which is completely arbitrary.

It enjoins moreover, an insight, thorough and exact, into the influences which so frequently fetter genius and confine the Sculptor to the duty of portraying the common-places of living human passion, and the unpicturesque incidents of modern days.

Regarding the Sculptor as the expositor of man's thought and belief, the visitor to this collection, small and rudimentary though it be, may form his own opinion as to what has been in different ages esteemed the faithful rendering of the grand, the sublime, the beautiful, the true.

Statues and Reliefs in the Museum by sculptors of modern times are Nos. 18, Cupid; 24, Diana; 28, Dorothea; 29, Eve at the Fountain; 38, Graces; 39, Greek Slave; 40, Hercules and Omphale (as the restorations and additional figure entitle Flaxman to the merit of having converted a mutilated torso into a complete group); 43, Innocence; 47, Mercury; 50, Mother and Child; 51, Musidora; 52, Narcissus; 53, Perseus; 58, St. George and the Dragon; 59, Tambourine Girl; 60, Terpsichore; 67, 68, 69, Venuses; 70, Venus and Cupid; and reliefs by Flaxman, Gibson, and Thorwaldsen.

The foregoing observations are presented with a diffidence much increased in consequence of the difficulty which has been experienced in the endeavours to reconcile conflicting chronological statements advanced, and the contrariety of view entertained by the learned writers consulted during the preparation of the Catalogue.

The authorities referred to have been verified, so that errors, which a more abundant leisure might have escaped, may be corrected; and omissions, necessary to avoid prolixity, or which the absence of means of obtaining information has caused,* may be supplied by the diligent and indulgent reader.

It would be ungracious to conclude without adverting to the fact that the Trustees owe to the generosity of friends formerly resident here, as well as of others but incidentally connected with the country, many of the interesting objects which the Museum contains.

These represent more than £800 expended in the purchase; but as furnishing means of enlightened gratification and material instruction in the practical branches of art-manufacture and design, and also as affording testimony of the kind support of the givers, they possess an enduring worth much exceeding their mere money value.

The pleasure originally afforded to the donors in presenting them to the institution for the benefit of the community, will doubtless be enhanced by the knowledge that the usefulness of their well directed liberality is thoroughly appreciated by the public of Victoria.

* One may well exclaim with the polished scholar and learned antiquarian, that "it is pity there is not something like a public register to preserve the memory of such statues as have been found from time to time, and to mark the particular places where they have been taken up, which would not only prevent many fruitless searches for the future, but might often give a considerable light into the quality of the place, or the design of the statue."—ABRISON, "Travels in Italy."

Casts of Statues.

1. ACHILLES.

Original in the Louvre, Paris.

Found at

Sculptor

Height, 6 feet 11 inches.

Restorations: fingers of right hand, left fore arm, extremities of toes.

Son of Peleus (King of the Myrmidons in Thessaly) and of Thetis. Killed at the siege of Troy, B.C. 1184, by Paris, son of Priam and Hecuba, whose elopement with Helen, wife of Menelaus, King of Sparta, led to the Trojan War.

See Homer Iliad; Virgil Æneid, vi. 57; Ovid Metam., xii.

2. ADONIS.

Original in the Vatican, Rome.

Found A.D. 1780, on the Via Labicana.

Sculptor

Height, 5 feet 8 inches.

Restorations: both arms, right leg, top of nose, by Albracini.

Different accounts of the parentage of this youth are given by ancient writers. He was beloved by Venus, who accompanied him in hunting; he was killed by a wild boar. He is identified with the Syrian Thammuz of Ezekiel viii. 14.

While smooth Adonis from his native rock
Ran purple to the Sea, supposed with blood
Of Thammuz yearly wounded.

3. AMAZON. Presented to the Trustees by John Werge Howey, Esq.

Original in the Vatican.

Found at the Villa Mattei, Rome.

Sculptor, Polyclitus flourished B.C. 450.

Height, 6 feet 2 inches.

Restorations: the arms.

The Amazons were a race of warrior women who inhabited the territory of the Caucasus. Some believe that the name means that they were not nursed at the breast, or were without breasts, or because each had her right breast cut off that it might not impede the drawing of the bow; others that it is derived from the Caucasian word for Artemis, the Moon, of which Deity they were the priestesses, and suggest that the injury to the breast may be accounted for by the laceration of the body in the paroxysms of their religious orgies. This is supposed to be a copy from one of the bronze statues placed in the Temple of Diana at Ephesus, spoken of by Pliny. In order of merit they stood thus: that of Polyclitus, first; of Phidias, second; of Ctesilaus, third; of Cydon, fourth; of Phradmon, fifth.

4. ANATOMICAL STATUE.

Sculptor, Houdon.

5. ANTINOUS.

Original in Capitol at Rome.

Found at Hadrian's Villa, Tivoli.

Sculptor

Height, 6 feet 6 inches.

Restorations: the head, right leg from below the knee, left foot, two fingers of right hand, left forearm.

A Bithynian youth, page of the Emperor Hadrian, drowned in the Nile A.D. 131. The Emperor, inconsolable for his loss, rebuilt the city of Besa, and called it Antinopolis. He caused him to be enrolled amongst the gods, gave his name to a star, erected temples for his honor in Egypt, Greece, and at his Tiburtine villa, and set up statues of him in many places.

See Spartian Hadrian, 14; Dion Cassius, lxi. 11; Pausanias, viii. 9; Il Vaticano, iv. 74; Merivale, vii.

6. APOLLO. THE BELVEDERE.

Original in the Vatican.

Found A.D. 1503, at Capo d'Anzio, the ancient Antium, birthplace of Nero, embellished by him at vast expense.

Sculptor: probably Calamis, B.C. 440, or Praxiteles, B.C. 364. Il Vaticano, iv. 252.

Height, 7 feet 2 inches.

Restorations: left hand, by Giovanni-angelo Montorsoli, born A.D. 1507. The right arm and leg are antique, but have been attached, as Winckelmann remarks, vol. ii., p. 427, not too skilfully; also i. 485.

Son of Jupiter and Latona, one of the great Divinities of the Greeks.

Or view the Lord of the merring bow,
The God of life, and poesy, and light;
The Sun in human limbs arrayed, and brow
All radiant from his triumph in the fight,
The ~~shaft~~ hath just been shot the arrow bright
With an immortal's vengeance; in his eye
And nostril beautiful disdain, and might
And majesty, flash their full lightnings by,
Developing in that one glance the Deity.

BYRON, Childe Harold, iv. 161.

I turn my glance, and lo!
The Archer-God speeds vengeance from his bow:
Not as when oft, amid his Delian glade,
The Lord of Beauty knelt to mortal maid;
Not as when winds were hush'd and waves lay mute,
Linging and hush'd beneath his silver lute;
But like the terrors of an angry sky—
Clouds on his brow and lightning in his eye,
The foot advanced, the haughty lips apart,
The voice just issuing from the swelling heart,
The breathing scorn, yet 'mid that scorn appear
No earthlier passions mix'd with human fear—
The god speaks from the marble not the less
Than when heav'n brightens with his loveliness;
And o'er each limb th' enamor'd Graces play,
Leave wrath its pride, but steal its gloom away.

BULWER.

God of the silver bow, from thee
The race of hapless Niobe
Received just punishment, to teach
The sin of proud and impious speech:
Thine arrows quell'd huge Tityos' lust
And stern Achilles laid in dust
Beneath the battlemented town
Of yet unconquered Ilium.

7. APOLLO SAUROKTONOS, the Lizard Killer.

Original in the Louvre.

Found, A.D. 1770, in the Palace of Cæsars, Rome.

Sculptor, Praxiteles. Original probably in bronze.

Height, 5 feet $1\frac{1}{2}$ inches.

Restorations: right hand from above wrist.

Supposed to represent the God when in his early youth, banished from heaven for having slain the Cyclop Steropes, one of the companions of Vulcan, he passed some time in the service of Admetus, King of Thessaly.

Valerius Flaccus, Argon., v. 445; Pliny, xxxiv. 19, 10; Martial, xiv. 170; Winckelmann, ii. 267, 338.

8. APOLLINO; or, the Lycian.

Original in the Royal Gallery, Florence.

Found at -

Sculptor

Height, 4 feet 6 inches.

Restorations: this statue was broken in pieces some years since by the fall upon it of Vandyke's portrait of the Emperor Charles V., of Spain. Restored by Bartolini.

Lo a youth was seen my floor to tread,
Chaste laurels nodding round his wreathed head;
No form so fair adorn'd the age of gold,
No form so fair could spring from human mould,
Loose o'er his tapering neck the ringlets flew,
That breathing myrtle dropp'd with Tyrian dew;
White as the moon did his complexion show,
And tinting crimson flush'd his skin of snow,
As girls with purple amaranths lilies thread,
As apples pale catch Autumn's streaky red.

THELLUS, iii. 364. By Elton.

See Lucian, Anacharsis; Galerie de Firenze, ii. 154.

9. ARIADNE. Presented to the Trustees by George James, Esq.

11. BACCHUS and AMPELUS. Presented to the Trustees by Lauchlan Mackinnon, Esq.

Original in the British Museum.

Found A.D. 1772, at La Storta, eight miles from Rome.

Sculptor

Height, 4 feet $10\frac{1}{2}$ inches, including the plinth, $3\frac{5}{8}$ inches.

Restorations: the whole of the right arm of Bacchus.

Bacchus, the god of wine, son of Jupiter and Semele. Ampelus his companion, a Phrygian youth, thrown from the back of a bull and killed. His body was changed into a vine. See Homer, Hymn v.; Cicero de Nat. Deor., iii. 23.; Ovid, Fasti, iii. 409.

12. BOXERS (The), or Lottatori, or Wrestlers, or Pancratiasts.

Original in the Royal Gallery, Florence.

Found A.D. 1535 or 1583, near the Lateran, at Rome.

Sculptor, Praxiteles or Scopas—if either.

Height, 2 feet $11\frac{1}{2}$ inches.

Restorations: the head of each; left arm, right leg from knee, left foot of uppermost figure; right arm, right leg from above knee of lowermost.

Supposed to represent Phaidrus and Tantalus, sons of Niobe, slain by Apollo, and to have formed part of the group of Niobe and her children, which occupied the tympanum of the pediment of the temple of Apollo, at Rome, in which was set up by Sosius, about B.C. 60, the statue of Apollo, in wood, brought from Selencia, and called the Apollo Sosianus. Mengs is of opinion that these are imitations of statues made at a period when taste was brought to the greatest perfection amongst the Greeks. One of the proofs adduced to displace the idea that these are boxers is, that in the statues of professional pugilists the cartilage inside the ear is generally crushed and flattened as if by blows. The ears of these figures are perfect.

See Anthol. Gr.; Ausonius, Her. Ep., 27, 28, 29; Ovid, Metam., vi., the Story of Niobe; Pliny, xiii. 5, xxxvi. 4; and the account by Propertius, Elegy, ii. 31, of the opening of the Portico of the Temple; Winckelmann, ii. 237.

13. BOY (extracting a thorn).

Original in Villa Albani, Rome. A repetition is in the Royal Gallery, Florence.

Sculptor

Height, 2 feet 4 inches

Restoration

14. BOY and GOOSE.

Original in the Capitol of Rome.

Found, A.D. 1789, at Roma Vecchia, the ancient Pagus Lemonius, on the Via Appia.

Sculptor, Boethius, a Carthaginian. See Virgil, Culex, 66.; Cicero in Verr. v. 14; Pliny, xxxiii. 55, xxxiv. 19.

Height, 2 feet 9 inches.

Restorations

15. BUDDHA, or Sakya.

From Rangoon, Burmah.

Carved in wood.

16. CANEPHORA.

i. Presented to the Trustees by Mrs. General Barry.

ii. By Sir William M'Beckett.

Original in the British Museum.

Found, A.D. 1766, at the Villa Strozzi, near Rome, close to the tomb of Cecilia Metella, wife of Crassus.

Sculptors, Criton and Nicolaus of Athens. They flourished in the time of Cicero, about B.C. 60, Winckelmann, ii. 377; or, in the time of the Antonines, about A.D. 150, Müller, 204.

Height, 7 feet $3\frac{1}{4}$ inches, including the modius or basket on the head.

Restorations: the lower right arm, left foot, and a small portion of the upper part of the modius.

The Canephore were maidens of the highest rank at Athens, who assisted at the sacred festivals held in honor of Pallas Athene (Minerva), and bore upon their heads baskets containing offerings to the Goddess: two of these, of "marvellous beauty," the work of Polyclitus, are enumerated by Cicero amongst the art treasures of which Verres despoiled the city of Messina in Sicily. Cicero, Oration against Verres, v. 3.

In the description of the ancient marbles in the British Museum, Part I., it is said that "this is evidently an architectural statue, one of the Caryatides, which supported the portico of an ancient building," probably a tomb. The Caryatides were intended to represent either the virgins who celebrated the worship of Diana Caryatis, or females of Caryæ, a town in the Peloponnesus, which took the part of the Persians at the time of the invasion of Xerxes, B.C. 480. It was taken after a protracted siege; the men were put to the sword, the women reduced to slavery. To commemorate the victory buildings were erected, the columns of which were in the form of women robed in the style of the captives.

Moore playfully alludes to them in his fifth fable for the Holy Alliance:—

'Tis like that sort of painful wonder
Which slender columns, laboring under
Enormous arches, give beholders;
Or those poor Caryatides,
Condemned to smile and stand at ease
With a whole house upon their shoulders.

Male figures used for similar purposes were called by the Greeks Atlantes, from Atlas, who, according to the early mythology, supported the heavens on his shoulders, and was metamorphosed by Perseus, by means of the head of Medusa, into the mountain chain in North Africa, which still bears his name. Pliny, xxxvi. 4; Ovid, Metam., iv. 630.

The Romans called them Telamones from Telamon, another name given to Atlas.

Vitruvius, 6, 9.

17. CASTOR AND POLLUX.

Height, 2 feet.
Son of Venus, Lucian, Dial. Deor. xii. xix.; Virgil, Ciris 133.

19. CUPID and PSYCHE.

Original in the Capitol, Rome.
Found on the Aventine Hill, Rome.
Sculptor
Height, 4 feet 1 inch.
Restorations: nose, chin, right hand, left foot of Cupid.

But far above in spangled sheen
Celestial Cupid her fam'd son advanc'd,
Holds his dear Psyche sweet entranc'd,
After her wandering labours long
Till free consent the gods among
Make her his eternal bride.

MILTON, Comus.

See Apuleius Metam.; Mrs. Tighe, Cupid and Psyche, of which Moore sings—

Tell me the witching tale again,
For never has my heart or ear
Hung on so sweet, so pure a strain;
So pure to feel, so sweet to hear.

20. CUPID.

Original in
Sculptor, Michael Angelo.
Height, 3 feet.

21. CYPARISSUS. Presented to the Trustees by James Malcolm, Esq.

Original in
Found at
Sculptor
Height, 4 feet 8 inches.
Restorations

A youth of the isle of Cea, one of the Cyclades. He inadvertently killed his favorite fawn. Overwhelmed with grief he was transformed into a cypress-tree.

'Twas when the summer sun at noon of day,
Through glowing Cancer shot his burning ray ;
'Twas then the fav'rite stag in cool retreat,
Had sought a shelter from the scorching heat,
Along the grass his weary limbs he laid,
Inhaling freshness from the breezy shade,
When Cyparissus, with his pointed dart,
Unknowing pierced him to the panting heart.

Ovid, Metam., x. 10, 6.

22. DEMOSTHENES. Presented to the Trustees by Molesworth Greene, Esq.

Original in Vatican.
Found near Villa Aldobrandini, at Frascati.
Sculptor
Height, 6 feet 5 inches.
Restorations : the hands and the scroll.

A renowned orator and statesman, born about B.C. 385. His most splendid orations were delivered to excite his countrymen, the Athenians, against the encroachments of the Macedonians under Philip, Alexander, and Antipater. To prevent falling into the hands of the latter he took poison and died, B.C. 322.

See Lucian, Encomium Dem. ; Plutarch ; Il Vaticano.

This statue appears to embody the ideas conveyed by the lines of Milton describing Satan—

As when of old some orator renown'd
In Athens or free Rome, where eloquence
Flourish'd—since mute—to some great cause address'd,
Stood in himself collected ; while each part,
Motion, each act won audience ere the tongue
Sometimes in highth began, as no delay
Of preface brooking, through his zeal of right—
So standing, moving on to highth up grown,
The Tempter, all impassion'd, thus began.

PARADISE LOST, xi. 670.

To Demosthenes, as well as to Pericles, Hyperides, and others, allusion is made in the lines—

Thence to the famous orators repair
Those ancient, whose resistless eloquence
Wielded at will that fierce democratic,
Shook the arsenal, and undermined over Greece,
To Macedon and Artaxerxes' throne.

MILTON, Paradise Regained, iv. 270.

23. DIANA. Called "à la Biche."

Original in Louvre, Paris.
Found at
Sculptor
Height, 6 feet 5 inches.

Restorations : part of right arm and both hands, by Giovannangelo Montorsoli.

Sister of Apollo ; identified with the Greek Artemis, the Egyptian Bubastis, the Phœnician Astarte, the Moon.

With these in troop
Came Astoreth, whom the Phœnicians call'd
Astarte, Queen of Heaven, with crescent horns.

25. DIANA (robing).

Original in Louvre.

Found at Gabii.

Sculptor

Height, 5 feet 4 inches.

Restorations : nose, right hand, left sleeve, left elbow, right foot to ankle, half of left leg.

But mild the beauties of Diana were,
And all her charms serene and sweetly fair ;
Her brother's looks adorn her radiant face,
Her cheeks and sparkling eyes express his grace.
The same she were, did not her sex alone
A difference cause and make the virgin known :
Her arms are naked to th' admiring eye,
And in the wind her careless tresses fly.

CLAUDIAN, Rape of Proserpine.

26. DISCOBOLUS (standing).

Original in Vatican.

Found at Colombaro, on the Appian Way, eight miles from Rome, at a Villa, supposed that of the Emperor Gallienus.

Sculptor, Nanycydes, born at Argos ; flourished B.C. 400.

Height, 5 feet 6 inches

Restorations : none.

Lucian ; Pliny, xxxiv. 19.

27. DISCOBOLUS (throwing quoit).

Original in the British Museum.

Found A.D. 1791, in the grounds of the Conte Fède, in that portion of Hadrian's villa, Tivoli, called the Pinacotheca.

Sculptor : supposed to be an ancient copy, in marble, from the work in brass by Myron, born at Eleutherae, in Greece, B.C. 480.

Height : to top of head, 4 feet 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ inches ; to top of quoit, 5 feet 2 $\frac{1}{8}$ inches.

Restorations : left hand, by Albani ; head, broken off and rejoined. Other representations of this figure, in somewhat differing attitudes, are in the Massimi collection at Rome, in the Vatican, in the Louvre, and in the Feversham collection in England. It is objected that the head has not been correctly re-adjusted. In the other reproductions it is turned back, as described by Lucian :—"The statue is known to all." "What statue," said I, "do you mean ?" "That beautiful one which you see as you enter the hall, made by Demetrius." "The Discobolus, I suppose, bending as if about to cast the discus, and looking back at the person who gives it to him, with one leg bent as if about to raise himself erect in the act of throwing." "No," said he, "that is one of the works of Myron."

See Cicero ad Heren., iv. 6 ; Quintilian, lib. ii. 13 ; Statius, vi. 645 ; Pliny, xxxiv.
19 ; Lucian, Philopseud., 18 ; Barry, Lectures, vol. i. 479.

28. DOROTHEA. Presented to the Trustees by Henry Moor, Esq.
Original in the collection of the Marquis of Lansdowne.
Sculptor, John Bell.
Height, 3 feet 11 inches.

This exclamation was distinctly overheard by the priest and his company, who, concluding that the person who spoke must be hard by, arose to make further enquiry, and had not gone twenty paces when, behind the fragment of a rock, they perceived a boy sitting under an ash-tree, in the habit of a peasant, whose face, as he stooped to wash his feet in a brook that murmured by him, they could not then survey. Their approach they managed with softness and silence, while his whole attention was employed in bathing his legs, which seemed two crystal pillars produced among the pebbles in the rill. They were surprised at the whiteness and beauty of his feet, which they could not believe had been formed to tread the clods and follow the cattle or plough, as his dress would have seemed to indicate; and the curate, who went foremost, finding himself still unperceived by the youth, made signs to the rest to crouch down or hide themselves behind a neighbouring rock. This being done, all three stood gazing attentively at the apparition, which was clad in a double-skirted grey jacket, girt about the middle with a white napkin, and wore breeches and hose of the same cloth, with a grey hunting cap on his head, the hose being pulled up to the middle of the leg, which actually seemed of white alabaster. Having washed his delicate feet, he wiped them with a handkerchief, which he took out of his cap, and in so doing lifted up his head, showing to the bystanders a face of such exquisite beauty that Cardenio said, in a whisper to the curate, "Since that is not Lucinda, it can be no earthly, but some celestial being." The youth taking off his cap and shaking his head, a large quantity of hair, that Apollo himself might envy, flowed down his shoulders, and discovered to the spectators that the supposed peasant was no other than a woman, the most delicate and handsome that the curate and the barber had ever beheld.

DON QUIXOTE, Part I., Book IV., chap. i.

29. EVE (at the fountain).
Original at the Bristol Museum.
Sculptor, Baily.
Height, 2 feet 7 inches.

But Eve,
Undecked save with herself; more lovely fair
Than wood nymph or the fairest goddess feigned
Of three that in Mount Ida naked strove,
Stood to entertain her guest from heaven; no veil
She needed, virtue-proof; no thought infirm
Altered her cheek.

MILTON, Paradise Lost, v. 380.

That day I oft remember, when from sleep
I first awak'd and found myself repos'd
Under a shade on flowers, much wondering where
And what I was, whence thither brought, and how.
Not distant far from thence a murmuring sound
Of waters issued from a cave, and spread
Into a liquid plain, then stood unmov'd
Pure as the expanse of Heaven; I thither went
With unexperienced thought, and laid me down
On the green bank, to look into the clear
Smooth lake, that to me seem'd another sky.
As I bent down to look, just opposite
A shape within the watery gleam appear'd,
Bending to look on me: I started back,
It started back; but pleas'd I soon return'd,
Pleas'd it return'd as soon with answering looks
Of sympathy and love. There I had fix'd
Mine eyes till now, and pin'd with vain desire,
Had not a voice thus warn'd me: What thou seest,
What there thou seest, fair creature, is thyself;
With thee it came and goes: but follow me,
And I will bring thee where no shadow stays
Thy coming, and thy soft embraces, he
Whose image thou art: him thou shalt enjoy
Inseparably thine, to him shalt bear
Multitudes like thyself, and thence be call'd
Mother of human race.

32. FATES. The.

Original in the British Museum.

Found at Athens.

Sculptor of the school of Phidias.

Height of two, 3 feet 11 inches; one, 4 feet 5 inches.

Restorations: none.

These, with Nos. 41, 42, and 62, are taken from the Elgin marbles, brought from Athens by Lord Elgin, who obtained them while Ambassador at Constantinople, in the beginning of the present century. His collection was purchased for the use of the public, A.D. 1815. These figures formed portion of the majestic composition in the eastern pediment of the Parthenon, the temple erected in honor of (Athene) Minerva, intended to represent the birth of the goddess when she sprung full grown, and completely armed, from the brain of (Zeus) Jupiter. Paus. i. 24. In the centre was seated the ruler of Olympus; on his left hand, likewise seated, was (Here) Juno; on his right stood (Hephaistos) Vulcan, leaning on the axe with which he had opened the head of Jupiter. Philostemon. Close to him stood the Virgin Goddess; opposed to her was (Poseidon) Neptune; on the extreme right is (Hyperion or Helios), the Sun, the heads of the horses of his chariot appear rising impetuous above the sea; close to him is the figure of Theseus, No. 62; a name accepted in the description of the ancient marbles in the British Museum, iii. 3, though it is there said that "Some authorities of great weight are nevertheless disposed to consider it as Hercules. The lion's skin on which he reposes, and his position immediately above some of his labors in the Metopes, warrant this."

On the extreme left is the chariot of Night descending into the western ocean, the horses' heads visible, one of which, supposed to have been touched by the master-stroke of Phidias himself, is No. 41. Next in order are these figures, No. 32. According to the authority cited above, an adjustment of them forms a group supposed with great probability to represent (Moirai) the Fates, accustomed to attend upon the occasion of a birth. They are Clotho, sitting apart, expressive of vigorous youth, Lachesis, supporting another, of sedate middle age, Atropos, in repose, of the languor of declining life. The winged Victory at their side is balanced by Iris, messenger of the gods, who conveys intelligence of the birth to (Demeter) Ceres and (Persephone) Proserpine, seated by Theseus on the confines of Olympus. Conjecture supplies the remaining objects.

No. 42 is called Ilissus, the Deified impersonation of the river which ran through the southern plain of Attica. This figure stood on the extreme right of the western pediment of the same temple in which was represented the victory of the goddess over Neptune in their contest for the sovereignty of the soil of Athens. Those who favor the opinion that No. 62 is meant for Hercules, suggest that this figure is with more probability that of Theseus than of the river god.

An account of the remainder of the Elgin marbles, of which the Trustees possess a complete series, is postponed until it can be arranged in a manner which will render the description intelligible.

Height, 4 feet 6 inches.

Restorations: the head and arms, by Michael Angelo Buonarrotti.

34. FAUN. Usually called the Rondinini Faun, because placed in the Rondinini Palace in the Corso, at Rome.

Original in the British Museum, entered in the Catalogue as statue of a satyr, playing on the crotala, or cymbals.

Found at

Sculptor

Restorations (attributed to Michael Angelo): the torso is the only portion really antique.

Height, 5 feet 8 inches.

35. GERMANICUS. By some supposed to be a figure of Mercury.

Original in the Louvre.

Found

Sculptor, probably Chimerus.

Height, 5 feet 11 inches.

Restorations: thumb and forefinger of right hand.

Son of Nero Claudius Drusus, nephew of the Emperor Tiberius, brother of the Emperor Claudius, father of the Emperor Caligula and of Agrippina, mother of the Emperor Nero. A distinguished general; born B.C. 15, died A.D. 19.

Clarac, Winckel, ii., 405.

36. GLADIATOR (Dying.)

Original in the Capitol, Rome.

Found in the gardens of Sallust, at Rome.

Sculptor, supposed to be Ctesilaus, contemporary of Phidias, B.C. 440; or by Pyromachus, B.C. 240, in bronze, of which the original is a copy.

Height, 2 feet 8 inches.

Restorations: right hand, said to be by Michael Angelo Buonarrotti.

Behold! where, in his nerv'd and naked might,
Rushes the circus champion to the fight;
Stretches the gaunt arm in its sweeping length;
Starts from each limb the eloquence of strength;
On the bent brow pride, power, and conquest reign;
From the curved lip the spirit breathes disdain;
And all the savage, in his sternest mood,
Speaks from the form unawed and unsubdued.
Where 'mid yon puny race of courts can be,
Son of the woods! the champion meet for thee?
The strife is o'er—E'en as a broken bow,
Nerveless and spent, the Terrible lies low!

He leans upon his hand—the lion crest
 Bows to the dust ; and from the untam'd breast
 Falls, drop by drop, life's tide ; the eye is dim ;
 And o'er the buckler droops the giant limb ;
 And death is on the mighty. Aye, thou proud
 And guilty city, let thy ruthless crowd
 Pour o'er their prey the mockery of their mirth ;
 Blood with those echoes calls forth from the earth ;
 And Heav'n full soon shall answer.

BULWER.

I see before me the Gladiator lie :
 He leans upon his hand—his manly brow
 Consents to death, but conquers agony,
 And his drooped head sinks gradually low—
 And through his side the last drops, ebbing slow
 From the red gash, fall heavy, one by one,
 Like the first of a thunder shower ; and now
 The arena swims around him—he is gone
 Ere ceased the inhuman shout which hailed the wretch who won.

He heard it, but he heeded not—his eyes
 Were with his heart, and that was far away :
 He recked not of the life he lost, nor prize,
 But where his rude hut by the Danube lay,
There were his young barbarians all at play,
There was their Dacian mother—he, their sire,
 Butchered to make a Roman holiday—
 All this rushed with his blood—Shall he expire
 And unavenged ?—Arise, ye Goths, and glut your ire.
 BYRON, Childe Harold, iv. 140.

Supported on his shorten'd arm he leans,
 Prone, agonizing ; with incumbent fate
 Heavy declines his head ; yet, dark beneath
 The suffering feature, sullen vengeance lowers,
 Shame, indignation, unaccomplished rage ;
 And still the cheated eye expects his fall.
 THOMSON, Liberty, iv. 157.

This statue, although usually known as that of a gladiator, and invested accordingly with many charming poetical associations, is supposed to be that of a herald. Ingenious conjecturers suggest Polyphontes, herald of Laius King of Thebes, killed by Œdipus, with his master ; or, Copeas, herald of Eurystheus, massacred by the Athenians ; or, Anthemoeritus, an Athenian herald, killed by the Megareans (Paus. i. 9). Men who engaged in single combat are mentioned in Athenæus, iv. 41, as known in early times in Greece ; but they do not appear to be of the class known in Italy as gladiators, first composed of captives in war, slaves, and condemned malefactors. Reasons adduced in support of this view are that the Greeks wore the beard until the age of Alexander the Great, who suggested that his Macedonian soldiers should shave (Athenæus, xiii. 18 ; Plutarch ; Apoph. Bas., 180). This figure is represented beardless. Gladiators did not carry a trumpet nor wear a cord round the neck, as heralds in the Olympic games were used to do. There is, however, more probability in the suggestion that it represents a Celtic or barbarian soldier or messenger wearing the Torques, or collar. Gladiators were first exhibited at Rome, A.D. 490, B.C. 264. Ctesilaus flourished about 176 years before that time. If this statue be his work it cannot represent a Roman gladiator.

Val. Max. iii. 4, 7 ; Winck. ii. 241, note to French ed.

37. GLADIATOR (The Fighting, or Borghese).

Original in the Louvre, Paris.

Found A.D. 1503 at Capo d'Anzio, the ancient Antium.

Sculptor, Agasias, or Hegesias, son of Dositheus, of Ephesus, flourished 490 B.C.

Height, from left foot to head, 5 feet.

Restorations : right arm and right ear.

Of raging aspect, rush'd impetuous forth
 The Gladiator Pitiless his look,
 And each keen sinew braced, the storm of war,
 Ruffling, o'er all his nervous body frowns.

THOMSON, Liberty, iv. 152.

Notwithstanding the commonly received opinion that this figure represents a gladiator, it has been suggested that it should rather be considered to be that of a foot soldier contending with a horseman. A conjecture is offered that it is intended for Achilles fighting with Penthesilea, Queen of the Amazons, who assisted the Trojans, and was slain by him.

See Winckelmann ii. 434. Thiersch.

38. GRACES. Aglaia, Euphrosyne, and Thalia.

Original in the collection of the Duke of Bedford (?).

Sculptor, Canova, born at Passagno in Italy, A.D. 1757, died A.D. 1822.

Height, 5 feet 2½ inches.

Eurynome, from ocean sprung, to Jove
 The beauteous Graces bore, inspiring love,
 Aglaia and Euphrosyne the fair,
 And thou, Thalia, of a graceful air.

HESTIOD, Theog., 907.

Daughters of Jove,
 From them flow all the decencies of life.
 Without them nothing pleases. Virtue's self
 Admired not loved : and those on whom they smile,
 Great though they be, and wise, and beautiful,
 Shine forth with double lustre.

39. GREEK SLAVE. Presented to the Trustees by Major-General Valiant.

Original in

Sculptor, Hiram Power.

Height, 5 feet 2 inches.

40. HERCULES and OMPHALE. Presented to the Trustees by Charles Hosson Ebdon, Esq.

Original in the London University.

Sculptor—the torso of Hercules was restored by Flaxman. He added the figure of Omphale.

Height, Hercules, 6 feet ½ inch ; Omphale, 6 feet 1 inch.

The history and labors of the demigod, Hercules, are known. Omphale was Queen of Lydia : to her Hercules submitted himself as a slave for three years in order to expiate his crime of having murdered Iphitus.

44. JASON.

Original in the Louvre. For some time known as Cincinnatus.

Found A.D. 1814, at Tivoli.

Sculptor

Height, 4 feet 8½ inches.

Restorations : right hand and part of arm, left arm. The head is not of the same marble as the rest of the figure, possibly supplied from another statue. It is said, also, that the ploughshare was added.

Son of Æson, descendant of Æolus. Pelias, brother of Æson, ruled in Ioleus. He was warned by an oracle that one of the Æolidæ would kill him. He ordered their destruction. Jason alone escaped. The oracle again warned Pelias to beware of a man with but one sandal. On the invitation of Pelias, Jason attended a sacrifice to Neptune. In crossing the River Amaurus, on the bank of which he lived as a husbandman, he lost one of his sandals. Pelias, alarmed, sent him on an expedition to Colchis, to bring the golden fleece. He sailed in the ship Argo. His success and ultimate return with Medea, and the death of Pelias, are described differently by the numerous authors who treat of this uncertain portion of history.

45. JULIAN DE MEDICI. Presented to the Trustees by John Fitzgerald Leslie Foster, Esq.

Original placed on the mausoleum erected to his memory by Pope Clement VII., in the Church of St. Lorenzo, Florence.

Sculptor, Michael Angelo.

Height, 5 feet $7\frac{1}{2}$ inches.

Duke of Nemours, youngest son of Lorenzo the Magnificent and brother of Leo X. Born, 1478 ; died, 1516.

46. LAOCOON.

Original in the Vatican.

Found A.D. 1506, in baths of Titus, Rome.

Sculptors, Agesander of Rhodes with Athenodorus his son, and Polydorus, supposed to be his son also. They flourished, according to Winckelmann, lib. ii. 289, in the time of Alexander the Great, about B.C. 330 ; according to Lessing and Thiersch, in the time of Titus, about A.D. 76.

Height of Laocoon, 5 feet $9\frac{1}{8}$ inches, to top of head 6 feet $10\frac{1}{4}$ inches ; of elder son, 3 feet $10\frac{1}{8}$ inches ; younger son, 3 feet $7\frac{1}{8}$ inches.

Restorations : the right arm, in terra cotta, by Bernini ; the arms and hands of each of the sons by Cornacchini. A head of the principal figure is in the collection of the Duc d'Arenberg, at Brussels, said by some to have belonged to the original.

See Pliny, Hist. N. xxxvi. 4 ; Il Vaticano, iv. 214 ; Goethe ; Spence Polymetis.

Laocoon, Neptune's priest by lot that year,
With solemn pomp then sacrificed a steer ;
When, dreadful to behold, from sea we spy'd }
Two serpents, rank'd abreast, the seas divide }
And smoothly sweep along the swelling tide, }
Their flaming crests above the waves they show,
Their bellies seem to burn the seas below ;
Their speckled tails advance to steer their course,
And on the sounding shore the flying billows force.
And now the strand and now the plain they held,
Their ardent eyes with bloody streaks were fill'd ;
Their nimble tongues they brandish'd as they came,
And lick'd their hissing jaws that sputtered flame.
We fled amazed. Their destin'd way they take,
And to Laocoon and his children make.

And first around the tender boys they wind,
Then with their sharpen'd fangs their limbs and bodies grind,
The wretched father, running to their aid
With pious haste but vain, they next invade ;
Twice round his waist their winding volumes roll'd
And twice about his gasping throat they fold ;
The priest thus doubly chok'd their crests divide,
And towering o'er his head in triumph ride.
With both his hands he labors at the knots,
His holy fillets the blue venom blots ;
His roaring fills the flitting air around.

Thus when an ox receives a glancing wound
He breaks his bands, the fatal altar flies,
And with loud bellowings breaks the yielding skies.

VIRGIL, Æn., lib. ii. 200. By Dryden.

Terrible! Mark and Tremble!—Fold by fold
 See round the writhing sire the enormous serpents roll'd;
 Mark the stern pang—the clench'd despairing clasp—
 The wild limbs struggling with that fatal grasp,
 The deep convulsion of the labouring breath—
 The intense and gathering agony of death.
 Yet 'mid the mortal's suffering still is view'd
 The haughty spirit shaken—not subdu'd:
 Tho' nature faint, tho' every fibre burst,
 Scath'd, stifled, crush'd, let vengeance wreak its worst;
 Fate—terror—Hell—let loose your powers of ill,
 Wring the rack'd form—the soul can scorn you still.

BULWER.

At last her utmost masterpiece she found
 That Maro fired. The miserable sire
 Wrapt with his sons in Fate's severest grasp;
 The serpents, twisting round, their stringent folds
 Inextricable tie. Such passion here,
 Such agonies, such bitterness of pain,
 Seem so to tremble through the tortured stone
 That the touch'd heart engrosses all the view.

Almost unmark'd the best proportions pass
 That ever Greece beheld; and seen alone,
 On the rapt eye the imperious passions seize;
 The father's double pangs, both for himself
 And sons convuls'd; to Heaven his rueful look,
 Imploping aid and half accensing, east;
 His fell despair, with indignation mix'd,
 As the strong-curling monsters from his side
 His full extended fury cannot tear.

More tender touched, with varied art, his sons
 All the soft rage of younger passions show:
 In a boy's helpless fate one sinks oppressed!
 While, yet unpierced, the frightened other tries
 His foot to steal out of the horrid twine.

THOMSON, Liberty, iv., 185.

Or, turning to the Vatican, go see
 Laocoon's torture dignifying pain—
 A father's love and mortal's agony
 With an immortal's patience blending: vain
 The struggle; vain, against the coiling strain
 And gripe, and deepening of the dragon's grasp,
 The old man's clench; the long-eneven'd chain
 Rivets the living links—the enormous asp
 Enforces pang on pang, and stifles gasp on gasp.

47. MERCURY.

Original in the collection of the Prince of Augustenberg. A second was executed for Lord Ashburton.

Sculptor, Thorwaldsen, born at Copenhagen, A.D., 1770, worked for many years at Rome, died at his birthplace, A.D. 1844.

Height, 5 feet 5 $\frac{3}{4}$ inches.

O Mercury, great Atlas' son
 Skill'd with persuasive voice to tame
 Fierce men from savage nature won
 To learn th' arena's graceful game:
 I sing thee, messenger of love,

52. NARCISSUS. Presented to the Trustees by Mrs. Westby.

Original in the collection of Her Majesty the Queen, at Osborne.
Sculptor, William Theed.
Height, 4 feet 11 inches.

This youth, son of Cepheus and the nymph Liriope, fell in love with his image reflected in a fountain, pined, and died. His body was transformed into the flower which bears his name.

For him the Naiads and the Dryads mourn,
Whom the sad echo answers in her turn ;
And now the sister nymphs prepare his urn,
When, looking for his corpse, they only found
A rising stalk with yellow blossoms crown'd.

53. PERSEUS.

Original in Vatican.
Sculptor, Canova, born at Passagno in Italy, A.D. 1757; died A.D. 1822.
Height, 7 feet 6 inches.

Son of Jupiter and Danaë. Banished from and afterwards regained the kingdom in Argos. He undertook to bring to Polydectes, King of Seriphus, the head of Medusa, which possessed the property of converting into stone whosoever looked upon it. Medusa was the only mortal of the three Gorgons, daughters of Phorcys and Ceto; their names were, Stheno, Euryale, and Medusa.

Restorations

An impersonation of modesty deified and worshipped in Greece and at Rome, where she had two sanctuaries—one erected to Pudicitia Patricia, in the Forum Boarium, near the temple of Hercules, the other to Pudicitia Plebeia, in the Vicus Longus. This figure has been supposed to represent Livia, wife of Augustus, died A.D. 29; or Sabina, wife of Hadrian, died A.D. 137; but there is no sufficient authority for either position. Spence, in his Polymetis, assumes that it is intended for Juno Matrona. Winckelmann asserts that it resembles the Muse Melpomene, as is displayed by the cothurnus.

56. SLAVE (The Listening). Known as the Arrotino or Remoleur, or the Whetter; also, as the Spy.

Original in the Royal Gallery, Florence.

Found at

Sculptor

Height, 3 feet.

Restorations: fingers of each hand, and the portion of the knife between the right hand and the whetstone.

The conjectures respecting this statue are various. By some it is supposed to represent the soothsayer Accius or Attus Navius, who carried into execution the idea in the mind of King Tarquin, and severed, by command of the king, the whetstone on which he was sharpening his razor.—Livy, i. 36. By others, the slave who overheard the plot into which the two sons of Junius Brutus entered for the restoration of Tarquin. Some suggest that it is meant for the slave who overheard the conspiracy of Catiline; others, for the Seythian slave, commanded by Apollo to flay Marsyas when vanquished by the god in a musical contest. See Hobhouse; notes to 4th canto of Childe Harold. While Lanzi asserts that the man is no other than Licinus, the celebrated barber of Julius Cæsar. The instrument in his hands does not seem very suitable for either operation.

The Goddess of Beauty, mother of Cupid, identified with the Aphrodite of the Greeks, Mylitta of the Babylonians, Alitta of the Arabians, and Mitra of the Persians.

See Homer, Hymn; Herod. i. 131; Lucretius, i.; Ovid, Fasti, iv. 15, 62, 143.

Till now swift circling a white foam arose
From that immortal substance, and a nymph
Was quicken'd in the midst, the trifling waves
First bore her to Cythera's heavenly coast;
Then reach'd she Cyprus girt with flowing seas,
And forth emerg'd a goddess in the charms
Of awful beauty. Where her delicate feet
Had press'd the sands, green herbage flow'ring sprang.
Her Aphrodite gods and mortals name
The foam-born goddess, and her name is known
As Cytherea with the blooming wreath,
For that she touch'd Cythera's flowery coast;
And Cypris, for that on the Cyprian shore
She rose amidst the multitude of waves,
And Philomedeia from the source of life.

63. VENUS DE MEDICI (two copies).

Original in the Royal Gallery, Florence.

Found at Hadrian's Villa, Tibur.

Sculptor: said to be Praxiteles. The name Cleomenes on the pedestal is generally supposed to be a forgery.

Height, 5 feet.

Restorations: right arm, the whole left arm from the elbow downward.

The original, of which that in the Florentine Gallery may be a copy, was sold by the Sculptor to the people of Cnidus, in Caria. It stood with a Venus by Phidias, a Cupid by Praxiteles, a Diana by Cephisodotus, and a group of Mars and Cupid, now in the Villa Ludovisi, in the Portico of Octavia, dedicated by Augustus to his sister. It was removed with the statues of Minerva of Lindus, in Rhodes, and of Juno, of Samos, to Constantinople. All three, with other works of art of inestimable value were destroyed by fire in the reign of Justinian, on the occasion of the riots between the Bérevoti, or Blue faction, and the Πράσσινοι, or Green faction, A.D. 532. The figures on the Dolphin at the base are (Eros and Anteros) Cupids, sons of Venus.

The Queen of Love arose, as from the deep
She sprung, in all the melting pomp of charms,
Bashful she bends, her well-taught look aside
Turns in enchanting guise; where dubious mix
Vain, conscious beauty, a dissimuled sense
Of modest shame and slippery looks of love,
The gazer grows enamored; and the stone,
As if exulting in its conquest, smiles.

THOMSON, Liberty, iv. 175.

There, too, the goddess loves in stone, and fills
The air around with beauty; we inhale
The ambrosial aspect, which, beheld, instils
Part of its immortality: the veil

Of heaven is half undrawn ; within the pale
 We stand, and in that form and face behold
 What mind can make, when Nature's self would fail ;
 And to the fond idolaters of old
 Envy the innate flash which such a soul could mould :

We gaze and turn away, and know not where,
 Dazzled and drunk with beauty, till the heart
 Reels with its fulness ; there—for ever there—
 Chain'd to the chariot of triumphal art,
 We stand as captives, and would not depart.
 Away ! there need no words, nor terms precise,
 The paltry jargon of the marble mart,
 Where pedantry gulls folly—we have eyes :
 Blood—pulse—and breast, confirm the Dardan shepherd's prize.

64. VENUS or DIONE.

Original in the British Museum.

Found A.D. 1776, at baths of Claudius, at Ostia, by Mr. Gavin Hamilton.

Sculptor

Height, 6 feet 11½ inches, including the plinth, 4½ inches.

Restorations : left arm, right hand, tip of nose.

It has not been determined whether this be the statue of Venus or of the female Titan Dione, daughter of Tethys, who, according to various writers, was the mother of Venus by Jupiter.

See Hesiod. Theog., 353 ; Homer Ill. v. 370.

Introduction to Coins, Medals, &c.

The medal, faithful to its charge of fame,
Through climes and ages bears each form and name,
In one short view subjected to our eye
Gods, emperors, heroes, sages, beauties lie.

POPE.

COINS*—the use of which has superseded the primitive operations of barter—have been likened to words in the language of commerce, not as being intended to designate any particular object, or class of objects, for which they are accounted an equivalent, but as measures of certain amounts of value applicable alike to all commodities.

Before the metals were adopted as representatives of the value of exchangeable articles, and until they became sufficiently abundant to supply the want of a circulating medium, different communities employed different things for the purpose which money now serves. Cattle, corn, tobacco, sugar, peltry, leather, fish, salt, nails, shells have been in turn the standard to which value was referred.†

We see that the precious metals, gold and silver, are mentioned in the earliest history of the eastern nations, and the latter is called “current money with the merchant.”

However, there is reason to believe that neither then,‡ nor for many ages after the time of Abraham, was money coined or stamped, but beaten or moulded into pieces or rings, its value was ascertained by weight. Such rings are represented on ancient Egyptian monuments, and have been found in countries inhabited by the Celtic races.

* Lord Coke, whose derivations are sometimes whimsical enough, deduces the word coin a cudiendo, because it is cut. He says, 1st Inst., 207a., in French coine means a corner; in ancient times money was square with corners. [See the Japanese coins in the Museum.] Some say, he continues, it is from koïrog, common for all things. Money he derives a monendo, not only because he that hath it is to be warned providently to use it, but because it admonishes of the the issuer and the value. Others derive it from Juno Moneta, in whose temple, at Rome, the mint was established. Livy, vii. 28; Ov. Fas. vi. 183. The Latin word nummus, as his Lordship says with becoming gravity, is ἀπὸ τοῦ νόμου, because it proceeds from the law not from nature. Pecunia is from pecus, cattle, for all wealth consisted originally in cattle.

The early Roman coins had on the obverse the head of Janus, on the reverse the prow of a ship (Ov. Fast. i. 229); and we learn from Macrobius, Saturn i. 7, that the boys of Rome diverted themselves in their generation with the exciting game of pitch and toss, and cried “heads or ships,” as our youngsters now-a-days indulge themselves, and cry “heads or tails;” or the youth of Amsterdam, “pop-of wapentje,” head or weapons, i.e., the coat of arms on the reverse.

† Smith’s “Wealth of Nations,” cap. iv.

‡ About B.C. 1900; Gen. xx. 16, xxiii. 16, xxiv. 35.

Without attempting to determine whether the first coinage occurred at Argos, under Phidon, about B.C. 748; or at Ægina*; or amongst the Lydians,† it is probable that the invention cannot be fixed at a period more remote than B.C. 800.

The study of numismatics embraces many subjects of enquiry. Regarding the coin as a manufactured article—it opens an investigation into the physical geography of the country from which it comes, whether the metal of which it is composed be found within its confines or imported from abroad? If the former, what were the minerals it contained, how and to what extent the mines were worked, the metals fused, refined, or adulterated? If the latter—as at Tyre,‡ Rhodes, Syracuse, and other commercial entrepôts where coining was extensively carried on—whence they were brought, and in exchange for what commodities?

As a symbol representing the gradations in the scale of value—it suggests the necessity for an acquaintance with the management of the public mints and the political economy of the times, subjects which, with others akin to them, cannot be considered devoid of attraction, when they have engaged the pens of such writers as Gibbon, Hume, Smith, Grote, Boeckh, and others.

As works of art—coins, medals, and seals invite attention to the knowledge of the metallurgist, the taste and ingenuity of the designer of the effigy, the skill of the engraver. In them and in such gems, cameos,* intaglios, niellos, and carvings as have engaged a Pyrgoteles, a Chronios, a Gnaios, an Admon, a Dioscorides, an Albert Durer, a Benvenuto Cellini, we may at the same time admire the excellence of the workmanship, and form an idea of the degree of refinement attained by the society amongst which such works were produced.

As aids to history—they possess a peculiar use. General laws which have governed ancient societies, exceptional transgressions of those laws which have given rise to political convulsions, codes of philosophy, systems of political economy, are not to be expected from them.

Still a series of medallions, medals, coins, and gems may be regarded as a band of laconic and suggestive commentators, giving evidence of facts of which they were contemporary witnesses. They have lived through time, surviving the perishable productions of deceased authors; they speak unprejudiced by ignorance or the influence of interest or faction, and they may be relied on as far as they extend, with as much confidence as can be reposed in most human testimony, to supply† omissions, confirm doubts, to reconcile the conflict, to correct the extravagance, or to silence the mendacity of careless, credulous, or unscrupulous writers.

From them we may learn particulars of pagan mythology which would have been, without them, unknown; for representations of Divinities and personifications of allegorical character, thus perpetuated, afford a fuller illustration of the Deities worshipped and of the rites practised than has been preserved in books.

The portraits of illustrious men and women are thus preserved, and we are made as familiar with their features as with those of our friends produced by the process of photography. Costume and ornament, domestic habits and indulgences, may be studied from them as from a modern magazine of fashion. Temples, the Deities in whose honor they were founded and the great men by whom consecrated; public buildings, with statements of the date when built, and their uses; representations of works of art, the originals of which have been destroyed; the position and insignia of towns and their people, their productions or the staples of trade, punning or equivocating emblems,* are depicted and inscribed on them.

* Cameo or camaieu is a general name given to anaglyphics or anaglyphies, cut in relief so as to appropriate to different parts of the work different colored layers or veins of which some precious stones—the onyx, sardonyx, agate, calcedony—are composed, or of such as are colored by artificial means. Shells of certain molluscous fish are also used for the purpose. The derivation usually accepted is camehuia or camehuia, the Oriental term to signify an onyx. Intaglio is a diaglyphic or engraving cut on a gem, from the Italian intagliare, to cut. Niello resembles damascene work; it is made by encasing silver and lead into other metals or into wood.

† A portion of the history of Bactria, from B.C. 100, is derived altogether from coins.

Military exploits, the conquest or enfranchisement of kingdoms or provinces, the confederations or treaties entered into, events worthy of being commemorated, are thus recorded; and chronology is by them enabled to pronounce with authority on many classes of occurrences.

It is well, however, that the numismatist should be guarded against the difficulties and deceptions which surround the study. These arise in some cases from errors in the minting, from the fabulous character of the devices, unintelligible in the absence of a clue to their meaning, from the indistinctness of the figures and legends, from the archaic and forgotten languages of the inscriptions, and the difficulty of deciphering or explaining them; frequently, also, from the remoteness and improbability of the conjectures respecting their signification, which, put forward with boldness and supported by learning, are calculated to captivate and mislead.

Other fruitful causes of confusion arise from coins having been reissued at different times, a new die† having been stamped upon one side or upon both without obliterating the old die; also by the issue at some periods—as during the reigns of Titus, Domitian, Nerva, Trajan—of coins bearing insignia of a different age‡—such as the badges§ of the families of the Æmilii, the Horatii, the Manlii, the Marcelli—either in compliment to them or to revive the recollection of ancient Roman valor and simplicity, and as was done in like manner, with perhaps other motives, in Sicily, Africa, and Byzantium. Forgeries¶ also, both fraudulent and excused on commercial grounds, or for military reasons, in ancient and modern times, have been extensive and successful.

* On the coin of Metapontum was an ear of corn; of Cyrene, a plant of silphium; of Selinus, a sprig of parsley (Σίναρις); of Rhodes, a rose; of Sicily, the triquetra, or three legs, like the modern heralddic emblem of the Isle of Man.

† Money coined by Vespasian, at Antioch, before he assumed the purple, was restamped, it is supposed, by Barchochebas, the Jewish insurgent, in the reign of Hadrian.

‡ These were called Restituti. § Niebuhr, Lect. on H. of R., iii, 317; Vopisc. An., 38.

Julius Caesar, in his first consulship, purloined 3,000 pounds weight of gold from the treasury and substituted for it gilt brass. Suetonius, Jul. Cas., 54. Caracalla issued spurious money with which to pay the stipend to the barbarians pensioned by him; they discovered the deception, and sent it back to Rome. Dio. Cas. lxxvii, 14. In the third century the silver coinage was debased, as in Ireland, by Queen Elizabeth, and in Prussia, in the seven years' war. Nieb. Lect. iii, 317. And the wit and sarcasm levelled by Swift, in his "Drapier's Letters," against George Wood, "hardwareman and bankrupt," who coined halfpence for circulation in Ireland, have been surpassed by the irony and invective of Aristophanes, directed against Dionysius, of Athens, who went by the name of ὁ ἀννοεῖν, "the man of brass." Aristoph. Frogs, 725; Ecclesiaz., 816; Aristotle Rhet., iii, 2; Athenæus, xv, 9. Davrien and Weber, of Florence; Galli, of Rome; Cogonier and La Roche, of the south of France; Carleton, of Holland; and Capraro, of Smyrna, have been amongst the most successful

The prerogative of coining usually resides in the monarch,* or chief executive power in the state.

On Roman coins the letters S.C. denote that the money was issued by the decree of the Senate. That body appears to have retained that privilege with respect to the copper coinage even after the institution of the Imperial authority, though not as regarded the coinage of gold and silver. The coins of families owe their origin to a singular arrangement. When the erection of a public building or carrying out of a particular public service was entrusted to a pro-consul, prætor, quæstor, or ædile, a sum of money sufficient for the purpose was voted. The senate then made a grant of a corresponding weight of bullion, and the triumviri monetales, or masters of the mint, stamped it with the titles and emblems of the officer.† These coins are devoid of one feature, the absence of which the chronologist and the historian lament, they rarely present a date.

Colonies, tributary states, and cities were allowed to enjoy the privilege of coining; but it seems that the Romans insisted on payment of the tribute being made in money of the commonwealth or of the empire, and not in the currency of their vassals.‡

Great Britain has already permitted one of her Australian dependencies to issue gold coin, from a branch of the Royal Mint established at Sydney, in New South Wales.

Leave to establish another branch in Melbourne has been applied for. Should Her Majesty the Queen be graciously pleased to sanction this exercise of Her Royal prerogative here, it is probable that a new impulse may be given to the study of numismatics in our community.

imitators in modern times. The Pillar dollar of Mexico and the Maria Theresa dollar have been reproduced by private manufacturers for the purposes of trade in the East, the Oriental nations being so averse to change as to prefer coins bearing the familiar effigies on them to others. The Germans, in ancient times, like Eastern nations of the present age, preferred silver to gold.—Tacitus de Mor. Ger. c. 5. Wellington adopted in France, A.D. 1814, an expedient similar to one which he had resorted to previously in India. He established a secret mint, at which he melted down British sovereigns and coined Napoleons: thus the loss on exchange was saved and the difficulties arising from the repugnance of the people of the country to take foreign money were evaded.—NAPIER, "Peninsular War," vi. 518.

* One of the charges preferred against Wolsey, to be found in Lord Coke's 4th Institute, 94, is given by Shakespeare, who makes Suffolk taunt the Cardinal—

" That out of mere ambition you have caus'd
Your holy hat to be stamp'd on the King's coin."

Hen. VIII., iii. 2.

The illegal act here is the stamping; for prelates and monasteries—York, Canterbury, Durham, Winchester, St. Edmundsbury, &c., &c.—were allowed by charter or usage to coin money. They had the profit of the coinage, but no power to institute either the alloy, denomination, or stamp.—HALE, P. C., 191.

† Niebuhr, Hist. of Rome, iii. 552.

‡ A memorable illustration of this is given in Matt. xx. 20; the corroborating evangelists, Mark, xii. 16, Luke, xx. 24, use the same words. On the coins of Judea were the pot of manna, the vine, the sheaf of corn, the palm, but they bore no "image or superscription."—Calmet Frag., 28.

Of Seals it will be observed there is a rather extensive collection ; they are chiefly British, and are divided into regal, those of corporations, lay or ecclesiastic, and of families.

In days when an ability to write was confined to but few persons, the seal took the place of the signature of the name to attest the authenticity of the document, and at all times the acts of persons, filling or associated in a corporate capacity, can be vouched only by affixing the seal of office or the common seal.

It is not proposed to enlarge at the present time on the subject. The use of seals is of great antiquity, but the Romans do not appear to have had recourse to them for public purposes as other nations have done.

Many of the seals of corporate bodies in this country are engraved with considerable skill. It will be observed with satisfaction, that all those of the municipalities recently created bear upon them, in addition to their own appropriate insignia, the Royal Arms of England.*

* THE PARTS OF A COIN ARE:—

The MILLING (of modern use), the EDGE, the RIM, the SIDES—of these the obverse bears the head or name of the monarch, the insignia or name of the state or city, and the chief device and inscription; the reverse bears the coat of arms, or the value, or the secondary inscription.

The FILL is the space unoccupied by device or inscription.

The EXERGUE is the space on the reverse below the main device.

The SYMBOL is an object in the field of a coin, neither a letter nor a monogram.

The MINT MARK.

A coin is SUPERSTRIKE when a new die has been struck on an old coin, the older impression being still in part legible like a Palimpsest MS.

DOUBLE STRIKE when one of the dies has shifted so as to make a double impression.

A MULE when it presents two obverse or two reverse types, or when the obverse and reverse types do not correspond.

Introduction to the Objects of Ceramic Art.

Εἰ μοί δώσετε μισθόν, αἰέσω, ὦ κεραμῆες*

KAMINOS H KERAMIS.—HOMER.

If ye deal freely, O my fiery friends,
As ye assure, I'll sing and serve your ends.
Pallas, vouchsafe, thou here invoc'd access:
Impose thy hand upon this forge and bless
All cups these artists earn, so that they may
Look black still with their depth; and every way
Give all their vessels a most sacred sale.

Pope.

Or thus rendered by COWPER:—

Pay me my price, Potters! and I will sing.
Attend, O Pallas! and, with lifted arm,
Protect their oven; let the cups and all
The sacred vessels blacken well, and, bak'd
With good success, yield them both fair renown
And profit.*

It has been ascertained that kaolin,† a clay suitable for the manufacture of porcelain,‡ abounds in Victoria in quantities almost inexhaustible.

These vast stores continue to invite the application of capital and labor to an industry in effect but an expansion of the simple potter's art. That has already established itself, and produced excellent tiles, pipes, terra cotta, and earthenware of different kinds, which, at the International Exhibition of 1862, bore a favorable comparison with those made in other countries, and which ought to remunerate the producer, when the expenses and loss incident to the importation of articles so bulky and so fragile are taken into account.

* These playful verses are found amongst the Epigrammata of Homer. It is said that certain potters, seeing Homer at a distance, and having heard much of his wisdom, called to him and promised to make him a present of some of their wares and of such other matters as they could afford if he would sing to them. Whereupon he improvised the twenty-three lines of this little poem.

† Kaolin and Petuntse are names in the Chinese language for felspathic granite rock, in different stages of decomposition. "Shekao" is a kind of gypsum, and "Haochie" a species of chalky stone, in appearance resembling soap. All are used in making different kinds of porcelain.

‡ The name is said to be derived from the Portuguese word porcelana, which signifies a marine shell, the cowrie, either because the lucid appearance of the interior is like that of the pottery or because it was imagined that the ware was composed of that material. Porcelana also means a little pig, a term also applied to a cup,

As the manufacture of the more delicate descriptions of porcelain employs for its perfection the economic resources of chemistry and science, and for its embellishment courts the assistance of the arts of sculpture and painting, it is obviously desirable that illustrations of the practical working of the manufacture, and also of the history of the art, should be assembled in a museum established for public instruction.

In many particulars the potter's art is full of interest. It is one of the earliest of those cultivated by every people which has emerged from the purely savage state. Holy writ abounds in direct and metaphorical allusions to it, which attest its antiquity.* Its frail productions, incapable of resisting any rude treatment, are yet, when protected from accidental or premeditated injury, as imperishable as the hardest gems, and thus become invaluable records in aid of historical research. More enduring than many kinds of stone and than many metals,† which crumble to decay or corrode by the alternating influences of certain climates, which are defaced or overturned by the destroying hand of man or allowed to perish by his neglect, these, whether entire or in disconnected fragments, remain truthful witnesses of the domestic manners of people long since passed away, of the limits of empire, and (like the fossil remains of shells, plants, and animals) of the physical changes which the earth itself has undergone.

The sequence of the reigns of the Chinese Emperors and the succession of dynasties can be fixed by the marks upon ancient porcelain, which denote the distinguishing appellations assumed by the sovereigns on their accession to the throne.

The early and, for the period, adventurous navigation and extended commerce of that singularly inventive people is proved by the discovery of some of their pottery in Egyptian sepulchres.‡

By the like testimony we may verify the assertions respecting the grandeur and extent of the ancient Assyrian cities, which disparaging criticism has regarded as incredible; and note the resemblance in physiognomy and bodily structure between the former occupants of different regions and of those who inhabit them at this day.

The glazed brick or tile, inscribed with cuneiform characters or with symbolic hieroglyphs, confirms the description of the magnificence of Babylon. The curious

* Job, ii. 8; Psalm, ii. 9; Isaiah, lxiv. 8, xlv. 9; Jeremiah, xviii. xix.; 1 Chron., iv. 23, gives an enumeration of the potters who dwelt amongst plants and hedges. Matt. xxvii. 10, informs us that the potter's field, near Jerusalem, was bought with the thirty pieces of silver returned by Judas into the treasury. At Athens, the quarter of the city inhabited by potters, was called "Ceramicus." Etruscan vase painting was a distinct art. Numa founded a college of potters at Rome. Pliny, xxxv. 50; Juvenal, vi. 340. The most stupendous collection of old crockery extant is that of which the Monte Testaccio is composed: it forms a huge mound, dignified with the title of one of the hills of Rome, and stands outside the gate of S. Paolo, near the pyramid of Caius Cestius.

† In this like the monument of Horace—

Quod non imber edax, non Aquilo impotens
Possit diruere, aut immutabilis
Annorum series et fuga temporum.

Odes, iii. 30, 3.

Chemical tests show that the coloring matter which forms the deep blue glaze of the Egyptian porcelain, probably 3,000 years old, is the oxide of cobalt, the knowledge of the use of which, lost for many centuries, has been revived within a comparatively recent period.

‡ Wilkinson's Ancient Egyptians, iii. 106.

similarity of the ornamental patterns—such as the honeysuckle, the Grecian fret, the Vitruvian scroll, found pervading Chinese, Bhuddist, Grecian, Etrusean,* Roman, and even Mexican pottery, and on the granite vessels of the Toltecks,† of the Mosquito shore—supports the reasonableness of the theory which derives them all from a common origin.

The cinerary urns and funereal vases and the domestic vessels‡ peculiar to the Greeks, placed in sepulchres by them, give evidence of a distinctive nationality preserved through many centuries, and even for a period which extends long after that people had lost a separate political existence. Athenæus, in his “Deipnosophists,” devotes a book (xi.) to the subject of drinking cups, and gives the names of 143 varieties, many of which were made by the potter. He says also that Lysippus, the statuary, wishing to gratify Cassander, conceived the ambition of inventing some peculiar kind of utensil in earthenware, on account of the extraordinary quantity of Mendean wine exported from Cassandria. He accordingly took great pains with that study, and collecting a number of goblets of every imaginable fashion, and taking a portion of the pattern of each, he made one of his own design.

In the tumuli, barrows, or mounds scattered over the face of the earth, from the heart of Asia westward to Great Britain, and northward to Upsala in Sweden, found also on the continent of America, earthenware vessels have been discovered, which, in accordance with prevailing conformity in the rites of sepulture, contained milk, or oil, or wine, honey, or blood, fruits, or corn.§

The march of the Roman legions can be traced by the size, shape, and stamps on the bricks used in buildings erected by their industrious colonists, and by remains of utensils for domestic purposes or for ornament, found along the southern shores of the Mediterranean; from the province of Upper Egypt through the Asiatic possessions; from the Pillars of Heracles throughout Spain and Gaul to that point of Germany where the career of the eagles was arrested by Arminius, and to the furthest spot to which they were carried in the British islands.||

* Etruria! next beneath thy magic hands
Glides the quick wheel, the plastic clay expands;
Nerved with fine touch, thy fingers (as it turns)
Mark the nice bounds of vases, ewers, and urns;
Round each fair form in lines immortal trace
Uncopied beauty and ideal grace.

DARWIN, Veg. c. ii., l. 291.

† Archæologia, vol. v. 318. Humboldt, Res. in Amer. ii. 90.

§ Vide Virgil Æn. iii. 62, vi. 212, for the account of the obsequies in memory of Polydorus and of Misenus. Roman vessels, known as the catina, crater, cymba, lachrymatoria (to hold tears or perfumes), olla, obrendarium, ossuarium, patera, patella, simpulum, simpuvium, testa, urna, unguentaria, and also coins, lamps, pieces of furniture, and ornaments of every variety, have been found in tombs. The celebrated Barberini, now better known as the Portland Vase, was found in a sarcophagus discovered about three miles from Rome, on the road to Frascati. The sarcophagus is in the Capitol, at Rome, and was for a time supposed to have contained the remains of Alexander Severus and Mamma, his mother. Its sides are covered with bas reliefs, admirably worked; the subjects are taken from “Homer’s Iliad.”

|| Archæologia, vol. v. 282; Claudian de Bello Getico, 416, in Pr. Cons. Stilich., 247.

In like manner the progress of the Saracens and other conquering races may be mapped out in the old world, and of the Aztecs and Peruvians in the new ; while the original contour of the earth's surface, in places where mankind formerly congregated, can be ascertained by portions of pottery brought up from great depths, and the speculations of the geologist or historian have been assisted and corrected by the enquiries of the antiquarian addressed to ascertain the age of earthen vessels exhumed from the alluvial deposit of the Nile.*

Independent, however, of such studies, a comprehensive collection of objects of the Ceramic Art has its marked beneficial and practical uses. It will serve to show for what purposes the clays which we possess are best adapted ; and as each specimen affords an instance of the kind of material used, the mode of preparation adopted, the national or characteristic style of ornament applied, each displays a variety of inventive ingenuity, manufacturing skill, and artistic taste in different stages of progressive improvement, ready for adoption or modification by our artificers.

The small collection at present in the Museum is composed chiefly of Donations. Mr. Dalgety, still connected in interest with this country, kindly placed One hundred pounds at the disposal of the Trustees in 1862. This sum was expended in procuring from Alderman Copeland an Illustrative Series of the mode of preparing the clay of Staffordshire, mixed with the several ingredients employed in the course of manufacture, together with types of some of the choice varieties of European porcelain. To these are added others, the gift of Mr. Childers ; and the excellent imitations of ancient Etruscan Vases, presented by Captain Clarke.

Copies of the Madonnas of Raphael and Murillo, the Flora of Titian, of the Judith of Riedel, acquired by purchase, show the degree of excellence to which this description of art manufacture has been carried at Munich.

A combination of the excellence of the mechanic's handicraft, and of the graceful elegance of the artist's taste in ornament, is shown in a few pieces, the joint labor of Wedgwood and Flaxman.

It is known that the sand used in some of Wedgwood's work was imported from Australia. May we not hope that, at no very distant future, men may be found in Victoria who may turn to as good account the material which lies unnoticed beneath our feet.†

For the information of those interested in the subject, a list of the works in the Library treating on pottery, and a chronological table of the discovery of the different kinds of ware, are given.

* Lyell on the Antiquity of Man, cap. iii.

† This would be a happy verification of the prediction uttered more than one hundred years ago—

Perhaps thy art may track the circling world,
Where'er thy Britain has her sails unfurl'd,
While wond'ring China shall with envy see,
And stoop to borrow her own arts from thee.

"Gentleman's Magazine," xxvii. 564.

Chronological Table of Ceramic Art.

B.C.

2698. Pottery* made in China.

2255. Chün the Emperor reigned, said to have been a potter before he was elevated to the throne; in this good fortune resembling Agathocles, King of Sicily, B.C. 316. Dio. Sic. xix. 35.

2130 or 2007. Babylon embellished with enamelled bricks, by Semiramis.

1900 to 1800. Egyptian potters in operation.

1500. Supposed invention of the Greek pottery.

1200. Potter's wheel,† probably in use in Greece.

1000. Pottery of this date at the least has been found in cities of Mexico, Yucatan, and Central America.

900. Potteries of Samos in operation.

507. Etruscan vases produced.

434 to 284. Græco-Etruscan vases.

418. Campanian vases made in Greece, Southern Italy, and Greek colonies.

A.D.

150. Roman lustrous pottery made.

711 to 780. Arabian varnished pottery made by the Saracens in Spain.

1115. Majolica,‡ brought to Pisa from Majorca.

1154. Supposed first introduction into Europe of porcelain.§

1277. Porcelain tower erected near Nankin.

1300. Plumbeiferous and stanniferous glazes made in Persia, Spain.

1415. Lucca della Robbia made enamelled ware at Florence.

1475. Ware made at Faenza.

1511 to 1540. Majolica made at Arezzo, Flaminio, Gubbio, Pesaro, Urbino.

1518. The Portuguese introduce porcelain largely into Europe by way of the Cape of Good Hope.

1540. Flemish stoneware.

* Pottery is opaque, glazed or unglazed.

† The potter's wheel is mentioned by Homer, II. xviii. 600, who flourished probably about B.C. 900; by Jeremiah, xviii. 3, who wrote about B.C. 600, and by Aristophanes, in the Ecclesiazusæ, brought on the stage B.C. 392. It has supplied a subject for illustration to Shakespeare, who makes Talbot say—
"My thoughts are whirled like a potter's wheel."

First part of Henry VI., i. 5.

As well as to the son of Sirach, who compiled Eccles. From xxxviii. 29, 30 it appears that lead was employed to produce a glaze about B.C. 200.

‡ Majolica is a soft paste covered with a metallic glaze or enamel, and opaque.

§ Porcelain is a hard paste covered with a vitreous glaze, and semi-transparent.

1544. Choice white paste ware made at Deruta. Faience* was made at Nocera, Rimini, Forli, Imola, Spello.
1547. Faience of Henry II., France.
- 1555 to 1600. Bernard Palissy made enamelled faience in France; faience made at Delft, in Holland.
- 1574 to 1631. Majolica made at Castel Durante.
1603. Faience of Nevers, France.
1695. French soft porcelain, St. Clond.
1706. Böttcher's† first Saxony porcelain; 1710 to 1760, made at Meissen.
1720. Porcelain made at Vienna.
1725. Fine faience, with silex, made in England.
1736. Manufactory of Capo di Monte established at Naples by Charles III.
1741. Very fine soft porcelain, pâte tendre, made at Sevres.
1759. Manufactory established at El Buen Retiro by Charles III. of Naples, on his accession to the throne of Spain.
1763. Wedgwood made fine earthenware.
1770. Hard porcelain made at Sevres.
1800. Spode brought soft English porcelain to perfection. Introduction of phosphate of lime and boracic acid.
1830. Fine faience brought to perfection, Staffordshire.
1842. Invention of the ceramic statuary at Alderman Copeland's works, Stoke-upon-Trent, by Thomas Battam, F.S.A.

This was followed by imitations at several manufactories in the Staffordshire potteries, under the name of Parian, Carrara, &c.

* Faience includes all glazed earthenware. The name is probably derived from Faenza, a town near Bologna.

† It is somewhat amusing to note that the application of the kaolin of Aue, in the Erzgebirge, to the manufacture of porcelain arose from Böttcher's complaining of the weight of his wig. On enquiry, he found that it had been powdered with "Schnorr's white earth," discovered A.D. 1715, used as a substitute for flour. This suggested the idea that the adulterating compound must be of mineral origin. It was tested, and the long desired material was found.

Introduction to the School of Design.

Thine in the dearest design of industry.

SHAKESPEARE.

THE establishment of a School of Design in connection with the Museum of Art has been for a long time in the contemplation of the Trustees.

In consequence of the pressure of demands for works of more immediate necessity, arising from the rapid occupation of a vast territory in a state of nature, the people of Victoria have hitherto been dependent to a considerable extent upon the artizans of Europe and elsewhere for many of the superior descriptions of furniture, for objects of house decoration, domestic ornament, and other matters which display the development of taste as applied to art manufacture.

Many of the grosser wants are now in a great measure supplied, it is time therefore to invite the skilled workmen (of whom so large and efficient a body exists amongst us), and also the young mechanic entering on the study and practice of his calling, to the means organised for their especial instruction and benefit.

None will more readily admit than they will that a knowledge of the rules of art, which lead to the combination of elegance and usefulness, can be best imparted by the presence of those agencies which convey at once to the mind of the artizan palpable ideas of the thing which he wants to fashion into shape; while his experience teaches him that a power of applying such knowledge with expedition and neatness can give to an object, composed of the commonest materials, an attractive style and character, and a positive value, exceeding those which ill-governed or misdirected labor expended on costly substances can earn for the producer.

By easy access to a comprehensive collection, illustrating the various branches of art on which he is employed, the man gifted with a quick eye, with a diligently schooled habit of observation, with a hand obedient to the direction of well-grounded judgment, will be saved much unprofitable toil.

Notions only faintly, irregularly, or grotesquely defined in his imagination may, by the correcting force of pure types and models, assume a form consistent and harmonious.

The assemblage of successful results, represented in casts, moulds, and illustrated works of art, must assist in economising the waste of inventive energy, and in regulating the deviations of untutored skill.

However, it is not in the ornamental manufactures alone that the influence of such a school will make itself felt. The alliance of this with all the branches of the graphic and plastic arts is so intimate, that what instructs the practitioner in one will inform the student in the others also; and as the relations of the artist and of those who acquire or take delight in his productions are reciprocal, it is obvious that the personal success of the individual must ultimately lead to the improvement and refinement in taste of the general public.

The Trustees have been materially assisted in their efforts by the generosity of Mr. Murphy, formerly a resident in Melbourne. In the year 1862 he presented to them for the use of this community a collection of casts and moulds, similar to those used in the South Kensington Museum; these were prepared by Mr. Brucciani, of Great Russell street, London, and it is due to him to mention that, on being informed that they were intended for public instruction in Victoria, he made a large reduction in the price usually charged for them, and he himself bore the expense of packing them for the voyage.

A list of books in the Library treating on the subject of Art and Design is subjoined.

"Then the king (Anguish, of Ireland) for great favor made Sir Tramtrist (Tristram) to bee put in his daughter's ward and keeping, because shee was a noble surgion. And so when she had searched his wound, found in the bottom of his wound that there was poyson, and within a little while she healed him, and therefore Tramtrist cast great love to La Beale Isoude, for she was at that time the fairest lady of the world, and there Sir Tramtrist learned her to harpe, and she began to have a great fientesie unto Sir Tramtrist."—Wright, Hist. of K. 7. DEPARTURE OF THE PILGRIM FATHERS. Painted by Cope.

"The conditions having been mutually agreed on betwixt the company, the merchants and the Leyden agents returned with the two vessels to Delft Haven, the port of Leyden. On their arrival, all needful preparations were speedily made; and on the twenty-first day of July, 1620, the whole congregation met for humiliation and prayer, when Mr. Robinson preached, with deep emotion, from Ezra viii. 21, 22.

After the solemnities of the day were closed, the members of the church who were to remain at Leyden 'feasted us that were to go,' observes Mr. Winslow, 'at our pastor's house, being large, where we refreshed ourselves, after tears with singing of psalms, making joyful melody in our hearts, as well as with the voice, there being many of the congregation very expert in music; and indeed it was the sweetest melody that ever mine ears heard. After this they accompanied us to Delft Haven, where we were to embark, and there feasted us again; and after prayer, performed by our pastor, where a flood of tears was poured out, they accompanied us to the ship, but were not able to speak one to another for the abundance of sorrow to part. But we only going aboard (the ship lying to the quay and ready to set sail, the wind being fair) we gave them a volley of small shot and three pieces of ordnance, and so, lifting up our hands to each other, and hearts for each other to the Lord our God, we departed, and found his presence with us in the midst of our manifold straits He carried us through.' . . . The pilgrims had a prosperous voyage to Southampton, where the Mayflower was awaiting them."

Works of Robinson, the Pilgrim Father, vol. i. 41, 46, 47.

8. BUNYAN IN PRISON. Painted by Folingsby.

Bunyan, John, born at Elstow, near Bedford, in 1628, was indicted and committed to Bedford Jail, November 12th, 1660, as a "common upholder of several unlawful meetings and conventicles, to the great disturbance and distraction of the good subjects of this kingdom." He had by his wife four children, one of whom, named Mary, was blind. This daughter, he said, lay nearer his heart whilst he was in prison than all the rest; and that the thought of her enduring hardship would be sometimes almost sufficient to break his heart. He is here represented with his daughter Mary by his side, preaching to his fellow-prisoners. He might have had his liberty if he would have engaged not to preach any more; but Bunyan was too sincere in his purpose, and too deeply impressed with the reality of his call to the work to enter into any such engagement. He remained, in consequence, a prisoner, as he expressed it, for conscience sake till 1672. Prisons were then very different places, and prisoners very differently treated to what they are now; but Bunyan seems on the whole to have met with as much consideration as was compatible with imprisonment at all. From the first he used to preach in the jail, then crowded with persons in custody for attending at a conventicle. For the maintenance of his family he was allowed to make tagged thread-laces; he had the free use of his "prison library," the Bible and the Book of Martyrs, and of writing materials. During the later years of his imprisonment he was permitted to go into the town as often as he pleased. On one occasion he even made a journey to London, though for permitting that the jailer received a severe censure. He died in London, of a fever, 1688, aged 60.

The lines on the wall are—

Doth the owle to them appeare,
Which put them all into a feare;
Will not the man in treble crown
Fright the owle unto the ground.
